

Pouring the foundation

From left, Ben Collins, City of Clemson building inspector; Ross Hanahan, development manager, and Matt Kamb, foreman for McGee, stand at the site where an inspection was held last week prior to pouring the concrete foundation for the Patrick Square sales office. The office, which will feature a brick exterior designed to have the look of a commercial downtown area, marks the first project for Patrick Square. Groundbreaking for the 179-acre planned development — to feature a mix of residential styles ranging from single-family homes on small, medium and large lots to duplexes, condominiums, “Live/Work” and retail units — is expected by late winter or early spring and the project itself will take six years to complete.

Photo courtesy of Patrick Square

